Chief of Police

STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

The city of Stamford, Connecticut, is expanding its search for an experienced police executive to assume the leadership of its police department.

Stamford is a diverse community of approximately 108,000 people, located on Long Island Sound at the southwestern end of Connecticut, approximately one hour from New York City. Encompassing an area of 40 square miles, Stamford has the third largest concentration of corporate headquarters in the nation. While 45,000 people commute into the city daily, the community maintains a balance of fast-paced urban life with suburban residential areas.

The department consists of approximately 285 sworn and 50 civilian personnel with a budget of $18.5 million.

Minimum qualifications: Candidates must have working experience as a police officer; command experience of at least five years as a captain (or equivalent) or above in a department of 100 or more sworn officers; a baccalaureate degree from an accredited college or university in business or public, police or criminal justice administration (a master's degree in a related field preferable); and an unblemished record of integrity. Qualification for the position requires strong leadership abilities, proven skills in management and systems implementation, proficiency in labor relations, a proven commitment to training, a willingness to work with the community in pursuit of common goals and a sensitivity to the diversity of opinion and cultures in an urban atmosphere. Further, candidates must have a track record of communications with all levels of the police department. All applicants must agree to psychological and polygraph testing, a medical exam and an extensive background investigation.
